From Brickell to Sunny Isles, here are the half-dozen tried-and-true retreats which prove that in Miami, everything old is new again.

As the art cognoscenti and global talent dealers descend on South Florida for the annual bacchanalia that is Art Basel Miami, this year they might consider skipping some of the hipster hotels in favor of these classics. All of them have just emerged from major renovations that render them contenders for the title of "icon."

Brasserie Laurel, another brassy brasserie, is adding casual French flavor to South Florida, this time at the base of Miami Worldcenter's Caoba residential tower.

Ariete Hospitality Group and Michelin-starred chef-owner Michael Beltran aim to take a boîte out of the competition with suave suppers and valiant vins.

Caviar service kicks off the menu, followed by frog legs, foie gras and escargot.

Need more classic French cookery?

Try the turbot, entrecôte or boeuf en croûte.

Toast bon appétit with a rum-based Beneath the Sheets (below) or snag a $10 sparkling wine or a $9 martini during happy hour
